Bitterness and denunciations in his church, 46-48
Views on the war, still thought it caused by demagogues; but thought it had providential purposes. 1. Punish wicked people who had been too careless and indifferent and let government pass into hands of demagogues; 2. People had vilely abused privileges of slavery; and institution need to be reformed; 3. That consolidation of government might clear the "sand" of states rights that had been grating on the machinery ever since the adoption of the Constitution; As a minister he often doubted what his duty was during the war; we failed to encourage conservative peace party in North so that McClellan could have been elected; , 48-49
